is pleased to invite you to the CME on

“Stem Cells: Hope and Scope”
March 14th, 2015

Introduction

Advances in biotechnology have led to breakthroughs in the frontier of medical therapeutics. One of the most promising of these advances is the use of stem cells for therapy. Stem cells are unspecialized cells that are capable of changing themselves into almost any type of specialist cells, and therefore evoke the hope of finding a cure for an incurable condition. Though promising, stem cell research is also one of the most controversial topics of debate and requires a rational approach to understand its pros and cons.

The objective of this CME is to sensitize the delegates to the topic of stem cell research, its scope and potential applications in therapeutics.
